Food Agencies in Boston

We visited agencies in Boston that help people get healthy food. These are the places we visited.

- II The Clark-Cooper Community Gardens have 285 plots where people can grow a garden for only a little money. They are located at the Boston Nature Center in Mattapan. Many people that come from different countries, have different skin colors, and speak different languages grow their gardens there.
- II The Food Project has farms in Dorchester and in Lincoln, MA. They hire teenagers from the city and the country who they teach to plant vegetables, and who get to visit each other's farms. They sell the food they grow at their farmer's market in Dorchester, and they donate some of it to poor people.
- II The Greater Boston Food Bank is a big warehouse in Boston that gives food to different agencies. The agencies then make sure that people who need the food can get it. The Greater Boston Food Bank has a lot of closed boxes filled with food, cleaning supplies, juice, and other materials. They use big and small forklifts to lift up the boxes and take them to the trucks so the food can be driven to the agencies.
- II The Haley House is a café in Dudley Square that helps homeless people get job training to cook and work in a restaurant. They cook nutritious and delicious food from places like Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic. Customers can go there to eat and have conversations, and it is a good place for the community.
- II WIC is a place that helps women who are pregnant and their children get healthy food. WIC provides families with a check to buy healthy food at the store or a farmer's market. They teach women how to take care of their babies and what foods are nutritious like low-fat milk, cheese, and cereal with no sugar. They also weigh and measure women and children to see if they are healthy or if they need more exercise.
- II The Long Island Shelter is a shelter for homeless people. Over 400 people get bussed out from Boston to the shelter every night. The shelter has a big kitchen to make food, a cafeteria, and beds for people to sleep. There is a farm and greenhouse to grow their own food. They also train people to learn job skills like how to use a computer, how to cook, and how to grow food in a garden.
